INTROITS FOR TREBLE CHOIR

for the Extraordinary Form of the Roman Rite (1962 Roman Missal)
SSA (or SAT)

by Richard Rice
Along with a growing interest in the Extraordinary Form of the Roman Rite has come a growing interest in music for the traditional Mass. A resurgence in the singing of Gregorian chant, well begun before the Holy Father’s motu proprio, has gained momentum in its aftermath, as congregations and choirs discover the beauty of Missa cantata, and reappropriate its most authentic music. While the Church has long extolled the glories of her chant, and encouraged its frequent use, other forms of sacred music have received ecclesial approbation as well, to the degree they serve the sacred rites. Polyphonic settings of the Mass Ordinary naturally make up the bulk of the sacred choral treasure, and are once again finding their way into modern-day worship. The Proper cycle, those parts of the Mass that vary from Sunday to Sunday and mark in a special way the character of particular Feasts, have inspired their own polyphonic repertoire. The full Proper cycles of William Byrd, the Offertorium of Palestrina, and the many settings of individual Propers by Lassus, Isaac, and other Renaissance masters, give ample and eloquent evidence that these texts are equally worthy of the composer’s art.

Choirs who would be taxed by a steady diet of authentic plainsong have turned to alternative settings, most often of the psalm-tone variety (whether unison or in parts), but sometimes more elaborate. As more choirs are called upon to sing the traditional Mass (which may, in turn, inspire more singing of the Propers in the Ordinary Form as well), more demand for singable settings of these texts will need to be met. Such settings will necessarily reflect the varying voice arrangements and skill levels of different groups. Of most pressing need seems to be music of moderate difficulty, accessible to choirs of average but steadily developing ability, which both meets an immediate need, yet inspires a truly choral outlook. Also needed are settings that use flexible voicing, to acknowledge that not all choirs are, or can be, traditionally mixed. Even for mixed choirs, an occasional foray into different voicings provides a welcome respite from the inevitable SATB.

I designed this volume for choirs consisting mostly or exclusively of soprano and alto voices. The trio texture was popular among composers of the late Cecilian Movement, whose settings and transcriptions can still be heard in women’s religious communities. The Introits selected cover the entire liturgical year for Sundays and Solemnities of the traditional Roman Missal (1962), but most are used in the modern Missal as well. Each Introit retains its Gregorian psalm-tone verse, whose proper modality is reflected in the harmonized Introit itself. I have tried to preserve the natural rhythm of the Latin text, while still uncovering some type of motivic repetition. I have resorted only occasionally to text repetition when it helped to balance the musical phrase. I have made frequent use of mixed meters, without cluttering the score by marking all the metrical changes. Conductors should mark the changes, and conduct them (beating the half-note, as much as possible); singers need only keep an even quarter-note pulse, whether duple or compound, and follow the natural rhythm and accentuation of the text. Textual considerations will also govern the choice of tempo, which should always have a strong sense of forward movement.

The traditional rendering is presumed: Introit – Psalm Verse – Gloria Patri – Introit. For a protracted entrance rite, the Introit can be repeated between the verse and Gloria Patri. For the Ordinary Form of the Roman Rite, the Gloria Patri is optional (though to be encouraged, it seems to me). Because I retain the modality of the Gregorian setting, it is possible to sing the chant Introit first, and the polyphonic setting on the repeat (for choirs seeking an additional challenge). Finally, while I intend the collection for treble choirs, the alto part could be taken by tenors, perhaps transposed down a step, and a group of tenors and basses could sing the pieces an octave lower.

This collection is dedicated to my Poor Clare Sisters in Alexandria, Virginia, with whom I have enjoyed a musically and spiritually rewarding association over the years. Without their unfailingly cheerful inspiration, this volume would have been impossible.
